When to step in, and when to step back?

Building capacity for engagement and active choice.

In a world where we are often burdened with 'too much choice', time can feel like a scarce commodity. It can feel as though life is something that happens to us, instead of a series of events that we actively choose. How then, do we ensure our agency? In some way or another, we all struggle to connect with others and to the future that wants to emerge. How do we harness the power of the collective to move forward, together?

Alongside practitioners and participants from around the world, we will explore the following questions:

- How do we find belonging and the strength to step away from the paradigms and practises that no longer serve us?
- How do we use the power of choice to step into what really calls and inspires us?
- How do we connect our small ripples to make big waves through co-creating communities and actions that really matter?

We do not lack for good ideas or good intentions. We do not lack the technology or the expertise to put those ideas into action. What we are missing, rather, are skills for meaningful conversation, participatory leadership, effective democratic practices and learning how to work collaboratively in emergence to move into wiser action.

WHAT IS AOH?

Art of Hosting is a simple yet powerful process to design and facilitate conversations and workshops that tap into the whole potential of a group and its individuals. Art of Hosting takes a holistic approach beginning with understanding the underlying purpose of a gathering, how to invite participants, planning and accompanying the conversation, and harvesting the outputs in a useful manner.

AoH is an open-source social technology that incorporates (but is not limited to) methods such as
