

How to host conversations that matter and engage in a participative and co-creative process

Come and learn how to host conversations that matter and engage in a participative and co-creative process.

Are you are tired of boring meetings and the same old debates? Are you hungry for a better way to host collaborative conversations that lead to deeper engagement and wise action? Are you ready to learn new ways to step in, step up and practice hosting the possibility that lives in collective wisdom? Are you looking for proven ways to fuel your courage to host change at work, at home, in your community – anywhere that matters to you? Come and join us!

How can I contribute to regenerating communities and transform the system I live in?

How can I become a participatory leader using the Art of Hosting approach?

New ways of working are emerging and growing numbers of people want to move away from competition towards collaboration and peace. New skills and approaches are being cultivated that foster generative conversation where diverse perspectives can spark free thinking and acting. Living system principles are integrated as we explore the leadership that is needed now in our organisations and communities.

This workshop is for

- Community and non-profit leaders, social entrepreneurs, business leaders, department heads and program managers, community organisers, activists, next generation leaders and individuals who want to help.
- People who believe in the power of collective intelligence and creativity, and collaboration to improve their communities, teams, and organisations.
- Individuals and groups who are eager to build stronger teams and partnerships with each other and within their communities.
- People who are dedicated to creating healthy and resilient organisations and communities

“Basically, you will learn how you can use practical methods and tools to co-create more vibrant communities.” - a participant

You will walk away with the tools, frameworks and worldviews that will enable you to navigate complex challenges and opportunities in your work, community and personal life. We wonder: “What if learning together is the kind of leadership we need now?” Not that other forms are not important, but this is the one we need more of in most places

Some of the benefits

Groups, organizations and communities using the Art of Hosting practices report better decision-making, more innovation, greater ability to quickly respond to opportunity, challenge and change and improved relationship quality.

People who experience the Art of Hosting typically say that they walk away feeling more inspired and empowered and more able to help guide the meetings and conversations they are part of to move towards desirable outcomes.

This training equips you with

Methods and tools - peer circle; world café; open space; design for action; pro-action café; asking powerful questions; appreciative inquiry; story telling and more.

Approach: you will explore when to use which method and how to sequence them. It will help you understand when you want to be growing ideas and when and how to find convergence. It will help you identify which tools to use to ensure you get lasting results.

Process: you will practice process design; and consider when the process begins and ends, how you link it to other processes and how to work through periods that feel chaotic.

Ethos: the workshop will help you consider how participatory practices build engagement; how changes in your own thinking impact others; what happens when you release some control and how to ensure accountability. It will help you understand how participatory organisations are more innovative and more adaptable.

Courage: participants have told us that they step up and step in far more after the training; they feel invited to take leadership and drive for clarity and shared understanding; they engage others and build teams that work.

Results: successful and more ambitious projects; alignment, commitment to change that works; innovation; trust; effectiveness.
